Shiri Rozenberg is a photographer and conceptual artist working with photography, installation and site-specific research. Her practice reflects on themes of belonging, gender, memory and the archive, cultural dualities and self-presentation. Her work begins with a process of wandering and collecting, engaging with places, people and visual fragments that carry personal and collective histories. Her process involves creating manual collages from archival and personal photographs and found objects. These collages evolve into three-dimensional compositions that are digitally scanned and enlarged, shifting in scale from intimate fragments to almost human-sized forms. Her work frames not only the image but the act of looking itself, positioning the viewer within a dialogue between intention and interpretation.
